The Inside Heat™ TB is an IWB holster with thumb break. The precise molded contours along with the added thumb break provide excellent weapon retention. The top (mouth) is reinforced to ease... Without a good holster, concealed carry is going to be a nightmare. The wrong holster can feel uncomfortable and cumbersome. It can also make it more difficult to draw your firearm in a time of need. A good holster is necessary. It helps you hold and protect your firearm safely. This prevents it from damage and accidental discharge. It also allows you to draw quickly. If you've ever worn a bad or ill-fitting holster, you're intimately familiar with the dangers. Purchase the wrong holster, and you will be more likely to snag your finger or the gun. This can cause your trigger to discharge accidentally. The last thing you likely want is for your gun to fire unintentionally! A good holster makes it easier for you to draw your gun safely and effectively. The benefits of having a good holster are tenfold. Below we tell you everything you need to look for. What Makes a Great Concealed Carry Holster Don't just settle for a concealed carry holster that fits your budget. Budget is a major concern. Still, it's important to find a holster that checks off other boxes, too. Trigger Coverage When considering a holster, consider the trigger guard cover. The holster material should not press on the trigger guard in any way. This will can potentially depress the trigger. It is a major safety concern. The holster material should cover the trigger completely. That will prevent the likelihood of a discharge. Generally, the best material for this task includes leather and Kydex. Both materials protect the trigger. You also may find designs that disengage the safety of the handgun. Do not invest in a holster that does this. It could result in some dangerous accidents. Material There are a few types of holster materials: leather, Kydex, and hybrid. Most of the time, you'll have to decide between Kydex and leather. Kydex is essentially a polymer composite. It forms perfectly to the shape of your gun. Leather takes time to break-in. However, it is softer and less likely to scratch your gun. Hybrid holsters include both a Kydex shell and a leather backing. Pay attention to the quality of the materials. Durability and comfort are your greatest concerns here. Comfort If your holster isn't comfortable, you're probably going to leave it at home. Take the time to find a holster that is comfortable for your unique body. Retention Retention is just a fancy way of saying your handgun needs to stay put. Make sure your holster has solid retention devices. Without them, it might not hold the pistol well during strenuous activity. A poorly-fitting holster can cause issues with everyday use as well. This can dislodge your pistol from the holster. Possible retention devices include a strap and a thumb break. There are also other internal retention devices. There is an easy test for good retention. Set a pillow out on your kitchen table. Place your unloaded gun into the holster. Then turn the holster upside down over the pillow. Does the gun fall out? If it falls out, the retention is not up to par. You need a different holster. You could also try adjusting the retention devices with a screw. Drawing Drawing your handgun should be easy. Your handgun should allow you to get a good grip. You should be able to make a straight-line draw. The method and speed of drawing might vary depending on the type of handgun. You still want to look for a good, comfortable grip. You need to have a sure draw each and every time. Concealment Concealment is an obvious factor to consider. You are choosing a holster for concealed carry after all. You don't want your gun exposed to other people. It can set you up for some awkward and unsafe situations. Plus, an exposed weapon is illegal in some states. An inside the waistband holster will generally offer better concealment than an outside the waistband holster. An appendix holster offers even better concealment. Fit and Form The right holster for your best friend might not be the right holster for you. It's important to find a holster that fits you and your handgun well. It should also maintain its form in the long term. Consider how well the holster attaches to and detaches from your daily clothing. Chances are, you aren't going to be wearing the same clothes every day! Therefore, you will want a holster that can be removed and reattached with ease. Trying on a holster before purchasing is the best way to find a great fit. Protection Your holster should be designed to protect both you and your gun. Holsters constructed of hard material may leave marks on your gun over time. In addition, some stiff holsters can chafe and blister your skin. Consider both the holster material and the clips. Metal clips have a tendency to wear through clothing. Plastic clips – though not as strong – are more comfortable. Grip A good holster will allow for a good combat grip on your handgun. If it doesn't, it's time for a new holster. You need to be able to deactivate the safety and shoot one-handed. Drawing and firing from any position are also important. Reholstering Drawing and re-holstering are equally important. The mouth of your holster should stay open and rigid when you remove your gun. It should not take both hands for you to re-holster. You need to keep your other hand free. Personal Considerations Finally, a few other factors can determine your choice of holster. For example, women often have a harder time finding concealed carry holsters. One-size-fits-all holsters can be impossible to wear for some women. For instance, women naturally have wider hips than men. This can affect the cant and rake of the holster. That will make it more uncomfortable to wear. Women also have smaller hands (in most cases) than men. Trigger reach and grip size need to be taken into consideration. Women also have a shorter distance between the armpit and the hip. A belt holster might have to ride lower than normal. Also consider your personal physical strength. Some holster designs put weaker shooters at a disadvantage. Look for a holster that comes with a trial period or return policy. You should try the holster out for a set period. That way, you can find any issues without wasting money. How to Choose the Best Concealed Carry Holster for You Lifestyle The goal of a concealed carry holster is to remain undetected. Therefore, it needs to be comfortable and fit into your lifestyle. For instance, you might live a very active lifestyle. In that case, you will want a holster that has awesome retention devices. Comfort will be important. But retention will likely be the top feature you consider. Think about how you plan to use your holster. Make sure to try out different positions and holsters before purchasing one. Style of Dress There has been an ongoing debate about the ideal method of concealed carry. Some people argue that an inside the waistband (IWB) holster is ideal for concealed carry. Others are adamant that outside the waistband (OWB) holsters are more efficient. There is an equally large camp that says AIWB – appendix inside the waistband – holsters are perfect. The reality is that all three methods have their advantages and disadvantages. The decision will rest on the type of clothes that you prefer. An outside-the-waistband holster is usually more comfortable to carry. The weight of the pistol rests outside of your pants. There is less friction and strain against your body. There is also more maneuverability. You can carry any size of pistol, too. An inside-the-waistband holster will be suitable for compact firearms. It allows you to conceal your handgun more effectively. If you frequently wear thin or light clothing, this kind of holster is preferable. Do keep in mind that friction will be a factor. The final option is appendix-inside-the-waistband carry. This is the most convenient way to carry concealed. The position, however, does expose your femoral artery to some risk. You'll need to keep that in mind. Depending on your preferences, you can also choose a shoulder holster, an ankle holster, or a belly holster. There are truly options for everyone. It's a good idea to invest in a few high-quality holsters. That way you always have an option no matter what you are wearing. Top 18 Best Concealed Carry Holster Special DISCOUNT for 57CENTER readers only : 15% OFF SITEWIDE when checkout at WeThePeopleHolster CODE : 57CENTER When it comes to concealed carry holsters, the We The People IWB Holster is an excellent option.
